There is considerable research interest on the meaning and measurement of resilience from a variety of research perspectives including those from the hazards/disasters and global change communities.

A place-based model for understanding community resilience

It is generally accepted among environmental geographers that there is no such thing as a natural disaster. In every phase and aspect of a disaster â€“ causes, vulnerability, preparedness, results and response, and reconstruction â€“ the contours of disaster and the difference between who lives and who dies is to a greater or lesser extent a ...

At least 40 per cent of the worldâ€™s economy and 80 per cent of the needs of the poor are derived from biological resources. In addition, the richer the diversity of life, the greater the opportunity for medical discoveries, economic development, and adaptive responses to such new challenges as climate change.
