aluminum anodization method with nanoimprint technologies, which allowed for the first time the preparation of a monodomain porous alumina structure [35]. Numerous other groups, not mentioned here specifically, have also contributed to an improvement of porous alumina structures.

The anodizing process forms an oxide film, which grows from the base metal as an integral part of the metal and when properly applied imparts to the aluminum a hard, corrosion- and abrasion-resistant coating with excellent wear properties.

Anodizing of aluminum - ScienceDirect

Anodizing is an electrolytic oxidation process in which an aluminium component is made anodic in a cell containing an aqueous, acidic electrolyte and a metal cathode. The widely used anodizing electrolyte is sulphuric acid 1-
